I would be going to outer space to Pluto. It would be so much fun if it was not so cold. If you did not have the right clothes on you would freeze to death. But if it was not so cold you could have winter all year round. But it would take a long time to get there. But you could have snow ball fights if there was snow there. You could probably skat on ice there that would be fun with no gravity there. When you jump up you would float in the air for a couple seconds. It would be like a big ball of ice. And with no gravity you can float in the air. But at night you would get very cold. When you would lay down you would probably be floating in mid air & that would be fun to lay out.

floating in mind air. Then you could get up and build a hide out made out of snow and have your friend have a snow ball fight. After that you could build a snow man and make him as big as you can you could work on him for a week if you wanted to. You could make a ice skoper you could find a big peice of ice you could make a giant buck if your ice is big enough. You do that for a long time and you will get very tired making a ice skoper. But what else would you do on a planet made of ice. For food you can make snow cones any time you want because the planet is made up of nothing but ice. You can make ice cream that would be good it would never melt in outer space, that would be the best trip.

Score Point: 3

This response reflects a limited degree of proficiency in narrative writing skills. The writer develops a story around a trip to Pluto. Some detail, though repetitive, is provided to illustrate key ideas (floating in air). An accumulation of spelling errors causes some confusion for the reader. Stronger organization and greater control of writing skills are required for a higher score.
